Converting RAW to DNG Here's a quick way to convert the RAW file from your camera to DNG, a new file format by Adobe that they use for storing RAW files. DNG is an open file format, and as a result, it can be read by many different applications. If your original camera file type is still unknown, visit the manufacturer's website to find out which format it is stored in and then use one of the following resources to convert it. * **Convert to DNG:** If your camera manufacturer does not provide an option for converting to DNG, you can always use the free raw-to-DNG converter `RADRAW2DNG` (") or the more powerful RAW-to-DNG software `Adobe Capture NX 2` ("). The free software lets you convert from many different formats to DNG, including TIFF, JPEG, PNG, and WebP.

A new close-up image has been released of the 16 km asteroid Bennu, which will be the target of the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency's Hayabusa2 probe. The released image, captured on December 21, shows a meter-sized object captured in the center of a frame. A new close-up image of the asteroid Bennu has been released by the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (JAXA), which is developing the Hayabusa2 asteroid probe. The image, taken by JAXA's MINERVA-II satellite, shows a meter-sized object captured in the center of a frame. Hayabusa2's probe will launch next year and attempt to reach the asteroid and return samples to Earth in 2020. According to JAXA, the probe will crash into the asteroid, and — with the help of onboard instruments — will analyze the object as the probe burns up on the side of the object. Like the Apollo program, Hayabusa2 has provided the public with many glimpses of the asteroid. While the probe will spend three years traveling to Bennu, it has already passed by the asteroid, allowing the public to "witness the main event" by examining images and video from the spacecraft. According to JAXA, the spacecraft's lifetime was extended by nine years to raise the probe's budget to $200 million from $150 million. In order to make the probe fly by the asteroid, the probe will take a new path, which will leave it traveling twice as fast as before and burn up a large amount of propellant during the flyby. The full image of Bennu is attached to this article. © 2018 TECHTIMES.com All rights reserved. Q: How to do I invoke a function on every render of a Component? Say I have a basic React Component that renders an action button for a certain React Router route. `import React from "react"; import { Button } from "react-bootstrap"; export default function Header() { return ( Hello, world! Submit ); }` This component is functional, but I want to make it render the same way every time I render it, meaning I want to do some function that should run regardless of what route I'm on. However, when I tried to create a function and invoke it from `React.render()` inside the Header, it never ran the function. Is there a way for me to get this working in a reliable way? My current code looks like this: `import React, { Component } from "react"; import { useHistory } from "react-router"; import ReactBootstrap from "react-bootstrap"; function getDisplayName() { if (this.props.displayName !== undefined) { return this.props.displayName; } } const Header = (props) => { return ( Hello, world! { useHistory.push("/") }>Submit ); } class App extends Component { constructor(props) { super(props); this.getDisplayName = this.getDisplayName.bind(this); } render() { return ( {this.getDisplayName()} ); } } export default`
