Xtdrfzncv Zpbkfudx Uspzfrudp Xtdrfzncv MmcncxqQ: How do I persist an object inside the Java heap, with no database? I have a service that needs to maintain a list of objects, which may be live and ready to provide to a client. The objects are ~32 bytes each, so a typical list of up to 1000 objects is 12kb. The concept I have in mind is to store this list of objects in the Java heap space. I am not sure whether this is a "poor design" or not. Pros: - As it is a simple list and does not need to be persisted to a database, it is much simpler than most of what I deal with. - There is no overhead to "getting" or "putting" data, it is just a 32 byte array. If you try to implement this
