The current standard management of chronic otitis media (COM) includes observation in the case of stable disease, or tympanostomy tube placement (TT) for disease progression. This study compares the outcomes of COM surgery with and without TT. This retrospective cohort study included 114 adult patients (159 ears) undergoing surgery for COM with either a tympanostomy tube alone (surgical intervention group) or with a tympanostomy tube and myringotomy (TT with drainage group). Patients were followed up for 6 months. The primary outcome measure was the proportion of successful surgery (defined as residual effusion, at least 50% reduction of otorrhea, and less than one episode per week after 6 months) during the 6-month follow-up period. Secondary outcome measures were overall complications, incidence of postoperative complications, and overall cost. A majority of patients had tympanic membrane perforation at presentation in both groups. Successful outcome was achieved in 57.7% of the surgical intervention group and 43.9% of the TT with drainage group at 6 months ($p=0.094$). There was no statistically significant difference in the rates of complications, incidence of postoperative complications, and total cost between the 2 groups. Failure to achieve successful outcome was correlated with an individual's recurrence rate, defined as a second surgery for the same ear. Severe COM with otorrhea is unlikely to be cured by tympanostomy tube insertion. Definitive surgery is recommended for such patients. If complete resolution of the COM is not achieved after a trial of conservative management, surgical intervention may be considered for recurrent COM. for the past decade and has found that less tax is not better for the economy." "The Democratic leadership no longer has any credibility on this issue," he said. "The Republican leadership and John McCain say they are for fewer taxes. But they all agree to cut Social Security. There is no real difference between the Democratic and Republican leadership on Social Security. They do not believe it is a benefit to society." Zoning and energy policy also figure prominently in the debate,
